

at 2011 a United Nations Development Programme ranking United States 23rd among 139 countries of its inequality-adjusted human development index (a IHDI) , of places lower for in standard HDI .

In 2011 a United Nations Development Programme ranking United States 23rd among 139 countries of its inequality-adjusted human development index (a IHDI) , of places lower for in standard HDI .

In 2011 the United Nations Development Programme ranking United States 23rd among 139 countries of its inequality-adjusted human development index (a IHDI) , of places lower for in standard HDI .

In 2011 the United Nations Development Programme ranking United States 23rd among 139 countries of its inequality-adjusted human development index (a IHDI) , of places lower for in standard HDI .

In 2011 the United Nations Development Programme ranking United States 23rd among 139 countries of The inequality-adjusted human development index (a IHDI) , of places lower for in standard HDI .

In 2011 the United Nations Development Programme ranking United States 23rd among 139 countries of The inequality-adjusted human development index (a IHDI) , of places lower for in standard HDI .

In 2011 the United Nations Development Programme ranked United States 23rd among 139 countries of The inequality-adjusted human development index (a IHDI) , of places lower for in standard HDI .

In 2011 the United Nations Development Programme ranked United States 23rd among 139 countries of the inequality-adjusted human development index (IHDI) , of places lower for in standard HDI .

In 2011 the United Nations Development Programme ranked United States 23rd among 139 countries of the inequality-adjusted human development index (IHDI) , for places lower in standard HDI .

In 2011 the United Nations Development Programme ranked United States 23rd among 139 countries of the inequality-adjusted human development index (IHDI) , for places lower in standard HDI .